Vice President of Public Policy and Communications, Florida Family Policy Council

Nathan Dunn grew up in the capitol city of Montgomery, Alabama. He later attended Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Virginia where he received a degree in economics and studied political science. He later studied theology and has done graduate work at Reformed Theological Seminary in Orlando.

Nathan Dunn's professional background is in ministry communications, public relations and politics. For ten years he worked with the International Christian mission organization, Campus Crusade for Christ. While at Campus Crusade, Dunn served as the top communications assistant for its president, the late Dr. Bill Bright. He later became the Director of Communications for the U.S. Campus Ministry of Campus Crusade for Christ.

Concern for the culture and the direction of our nation has caused Dunn to stay involved in the political process at a variety of levels since 1988. As a student, Dunn served as an intern with the Mayor of Montgomery and with an Alabama congressional office. For years he has worked with the campaigns of pro-family candidates in local, state and national races. In 2004, Dunn took a sabbatical and served as a full time press office volunteer for the campaign of U.S. Senator Mel Martinez.

Nathan currently oversees the public policy, governmental relations, and education efforts of the Florida Family Policy Council in the Tallahassee office.

The top priority for Dunn is his own family. His wife Suzanne is originally from Michigan. They were married in 1998 and they have two children.
